Q: Shell script to block users I'm using a macbook pro (i7 processor) and I was wondering if there is a way to setup a shell script to block certain users from accessing certain folder, or even all users from accessing all folders. In other words, I want it to have a "No Networking" mode if a certain user is logged in, and I do not want that user to access any folder. Thanks in advance, A: Try this: `$ sudo chown -R root:root /home/user/ $ sudo chown -R user /home/user/` The second one only chowns the home directory. A: Have a look at iptables. You can create a firewall using iptables, and add custom rules that will allow you to do exactly what you want, or modify rules that already exist to accomplish that. A glass tube is one of the most important tools in a welder's tool kit, as it enables the welder to hold his torch in a confined space. Typically, several glass tubes are held together by a band and the band is secured to the tubes by a retainer ring. The combination of a band and a retainer ring is usually referred to as a "cylindrical glass tube set." Typically, the band is somewhat resilient and can be used to hold the glass tubes in place, as well as to protect the tubes from damage. By resilient, it is meant that the band returns to its initial position when force is removed. Accordingly, in instances in which a tube is inadvertently removed from a retainer ring, the band maintains a tight grip on the glass tube. A glass tube set typically comprises a cylindrical ring of glass which encircles the glass tube. The cylindrical ring of glass is preferably coated or lined with a silicone-based material, which protects the glass ring from thermal shock during bending or heat-relieving processes. The ring is usually covered with a band of thermoplastic rubber or a polymer plastic. The band not only protects the ring of glass from the welder's torch, but also provides added strength to the band and retention of the glass tubes. The bands are often adhered to the glass tube set by spray adhesives or adhesives which are mixed by extrusion. The band is usually coated with a composition of polysulfide polymer, a

Q: how to bind Value converter, when it is in another project I have a ViewModel, with a Properties.Resources { ValueConverter }, inside the Properties the Resources is a converter, all works fine, but I can not use the ValueConverter, because it is not defined inside my ViewModel project. I need some help finding a way to implement this converter. Thanks A: I have a ViewModel, with a Properties.Resources { ValueConverter }, inside the Properties the Resources is a converter That sounds like one of the most strange ideas I've ever heard. Properties.Resources is completely unrelated to Windows.Resources, and therefore it's not the place to put a ValueConverter. If you want some sort of global converters, I would suggest you consider creating your own class that extends Window.Resources or something similar. You can then have your ViewModels access that from their Resources class. However, if you want to go the hard way, you can put your converters in your own MyXamlObject, which lives in your solution. I haven't done this myself, so I can't say how bad it is, but I would assume it's bad enough for someone to have written a blog post about it.

Abstract An assessment of the risk and need for fire danger on properties in the east coast of the South Island of New Zealand was carried out in the summer of 2004. Fireline surveys were conducted in three districts covering an area from the south coast to the west coast. Firelines were surveyed following the forestry practice of measuring 50 and 100 m on sides along roads and tracks from central locations. Three separate measures were used to identify infrequent firelines: (1) 1 km gap, (2) 1 km gap and 100 m gap, and (3) 1 km gap, 500 m gap and 100 m gap. Fireline density was calculated by dividing the number of firelines by the total area surveyed. A fireline gap ratio was also calculated for each index by dividing the percentage of 100 m gaps or gaps of different lengths by the total number of gaps identified. The combination of fireline density and gap ratio was used to calculate a fire danger measure for each property (i.e. the sum of fireline density and the percentage of gaps of any length). The proportion of properties with a high fire danger measure, mean daily temperatures over 20 °C (E1°C)
